Statement of Basic Position

Hurricane Wilma would have caused less damage to FPL’s facilities, and FPL would be seeking far less compensation from its customers in this case, if its inspection and maintenance practices had been more adequate. This is especially true with respect to its transmission and distribution facilities. It appears that the failures of portions of two transmission lines were the result of FPL’s inadequate construction management and maintenance practices. FPL’s customers should not be held financially responsible for these inadequacies.

FPL’s historic failure to properly inspect its over one million pole inventory led to greater storm damage than otherwise would have occurred had the utility properly and timely inspected its poles, maintained those capable of repair and replaced those requiring it. FPL’s inadequate pole and inspection efforts led directly to increased damages, the costs of which are imprudent and, therefore, should not be recovered from customers. The same is true of FPL’s inadequate tree-trimming, or vegetation management program, the failures of which led to a greater level of storm damage occurring than would have been the case with a prudent inspection and trimming program. None of the costs resulting from the failure to inspect and replace poles or from wind damage caused by inadequate vegetation management should be borne by customers.

There should also be no “double-counting” with the result that FPL’s customers are charged for costs already reflected in base rates. AARP agrees with the approach advocated by the Office of Public Counsel (“OPC”), which is that recoverable costs must be “incremental” to those already in base rates. There are substantial double-counting reductions, as advocated by OPC, that are endorsed by AARP and which should be removed from charges to be recovered from customers.

Furthermore, the Commission should deny FPL recovery of any monies not spent directly on repairing facilities damaged by the storm.

Lastly, AARP believes the Commission should limit the costs customers must bear through a storm securitization surcharge by approving a storm damage reserve of no more than $200 million. A $200 million storm damage reserve is large enough to withstand the storm damage from most, but not all, storm seasons over the last 16 years. Any storm damage costs in excess of the reserve balance could be addressed with a separate surcharge, as with 2004’s storm damages. Keeping the storm damage reserve level as low as is reasonably possible will reduce interest and bond issuance costs and minimize the financial impact on customers’ rates, while still allowing FPL and the Commission the flexibility to address FPL’s prudent storm recovery costs from year to year.

Issues and Positions

AARP has reviewed OPC’s draft Prehearing Statement and adopts the positions OPC has taken on each issue. Accordingly, to save time and expense associated with this pleading, the position of AARP should be stated as “The same as the Office of Public Counsel” for each issue on which OPC has stated a position. Where OPC has not expressed a position on an issue, AARP's position should be stated as “No position at this time.” AARP reserves the right, consistent with the Commission's rules and applicable procedural orders, to change or otherwise restate its positions up until the time of the Prehearing Conference or as otherwise permitted by the Prehearing Officer.

AARP has not stipulated to any issues other than issue 87.
