Comments : I did not have power for over 1 week with elderly people living in the house. It has been 25 years since Hurricane Andrew and we still have to deal with above ground power lines outages. Had FPL been forced to use some of the monies from the various rate increases to little by little start burying power lines underground, all of South Florida would have underground wiring by now and this power outage during a storm (sometimes even during a typical So Fla afternoon storm) would not continue to be an issue. Its getting hotter and hotter in South Florida with each passing year this needs to be addressed and no more excuses that underground wiring would not work because of flooding. I'll take my chances.
