Subject: TECO June Accident

To whom it may concern,

I just read an article in the Tampa Bay Times that the “Commission will decide whether the accident will have a bigger impact to the company’s (TECO) bottom line. The PSC has the power to determine what cost, if any, Tampa Electric can pass to costumers after an accident”.

Please consider the customers in this ordeal, how is that fair for us as customers of a utility that has a monopoly in the Tampa bay area for us to pay for an “accident” that they “willfully” (according to OSHA report) caused?

This accident was not the customers fault!!! So I believe as a customer we should not have to bear the burden of their incompetence in following their own safety rules. I have no pity for their bottom line, I am sure they have made millions in profits before and I am sure they will make millions in profit in the future.

I look forward to your response.

Thank you,
Jason Byron
