Public service commission, Randy Roland.

As I see from the letter you a written me about Duke energy and Florida Power & Light is another wishy-washy as a got you people in their back pockets non-was a short in this letter and you people need to do your job that your paid to do in the pulse of the Orlando center is an article it says tax cut the sap needs for Florida Power & Light storm fees now they avoided billing the customer 1.3 billion cost of restoring electricity after hurricane Irma, now Duke energy is still planning on charging the people this money for the restoring of electricity and clean up now if Florida Power & Light can afford to do this. I'm sure Duke energy can because last year they reaped in profits of over $1 billion now they need to take that province of $1 billion and put back into the electrical grid in fixing it and the cleanup.

Now as you are one of the commissions to deal with this here, you should make sure that this happens and civil let them get into your back pocket again because one day. If you don't do your job you're going to find yourself without a job because the people of the state of Florida will go boat you write out job. So you better do what you are voted in their to do or appointed to do by the Gov. That's just plain and simple. It's like the ABCs of school. You have to learn some first that's all I have for this. I thank you.

Tax cut zaps need for FPL storm fee

TALLAHASSEE — Florida Power & Light said Tuesday that savings from the federal tax overhaul will allow it to avoid billing customers for the $1.3 billion cost of restoring electricity after Hurricane Irma. FPL had planned to start billing customers in March for the restoration costs but put those plans on hold after Congress and President Donald Trump last month approved the overhaul, which cut corporate tax rates. Utilities are usually allowed to recoup storm costs from clients. Duke Energy has filed a petition to recoup $513 million.
