I am very concerned about this proposed rate increase for the utilities in Grenelefe.

We noticed that the boil water signs have been up since last year and they never have come down. Even though there was a recent Water-main break that was supposedly repaired the signs are still up so what does that mean? Do I want to purchase a condo in a place where I have to boil water?

I am seriously considering purchasing a condo in Grenelefe but now I'm fear that I'll be in over my head so I think you really need to rethink this. It's not a high-end community and people cannot afford to pay that much in utilities. No one will want to move into the area, which is going to make it unable to be resold or rented because nobody will be able to afford that high of a water bill on top of electricity and everything else.
